EVENT IN ARTISTIC AND POLITICAL PRACTICES

Symposium

In contemporary artistic, media and philosophical discourses the notion of 'event' has gained considerable currency. Since the 1990s the event has been central to a range of performative, media-based, socially and politically engaged artists' work, as well as in artists' involvement in/with non-artistic projects and practices ranging from political protest to scientific research. The growth of interest towards the potentials of art openly working with reception and/or participation as its methods has also led to institutional commissions for this type of artistic work. For the institutions event-based art has triggered entirely new questions about the documentation and preservation of artistic practices.

While the concept of the 'event' has been extensively discussed in some fields – for instance in theatre studies, urban studies and especially in philosophy – in recent art history and cultural theory, there are still few attempts of theorization.

This symposium sets out to articulate the meaning of the 'event' in relation to artistic, media-based and performative cultural practices. In presentations the range of the 'event' will be articulated, like the performative, conceptual, media-based, game-based, relational, participatory and other practices that can be approached as events. There will also be elaborations on the methodological issues of studying events.
