

LAPS

Gerrit Rietveld Academie

www.laps-rietveld.nl

PDF

20:00-22.00 - 23.11.2016

The Knight's Move: Joris Landman

On the surface the teapot seems to be a functional object. However, since the 1950's it has come to symbolise the precarious balance between reality and belief. In his article "Is there a God?", thinker and scientist Bertrand Russell famously compared the belief in God to the belief in a teapot orbiting the sun. Russell used the teapot to approach the reasoning behind agnosticism and atheism. If it is impossible to disprove the claim, therefore it must be true?

The image of a Celestial Teapot has since moved from literature to online visual canon, jumping through culture in unexpected and often entertaining ways. For his lecture, graphic designer Joris Landman will specifically be speaking about his own Celestial Teapot Project in which he traces the trajectory of this iconic teapot, and you will see some of the new and unexpected meanings that the teapot archetype has acquired over the past decades.

Joris Landman is a graphic designer and co-founder of Harris Blondman. In various collaborations, he works on projects and research in the fields of art and design, with a focus on digital media and culture. With his projects, Landman investigates how individuals and communities store meaning, identity, and knowledge in stories, images, and technology.

Wednesday 23 November 2016, 20:00 uur

Location: De Nieuwe Anita, Frederik Hendrikstraat 111

Language: English

Moderator: Sietske Roorda

Related posts:

1. The Knight's Move: Avery Gordon
2. The Knight's Move: Kunlé Adeyemi
3. Knight's Move: Ingo Niermann
4. Cutting Straight Through 523 Posters
5. Joris Lindhout – Contemplations of a Post-mortem Roy Lichtenstein